Abstract

Language is one of the greatest things given to mankind by God and this made humans to stand out from other creatures of the world. Humans alone has the gift to make sensible speech pattern and has the power to decipher different sounds made by other creature. All over the world, races, societies and ethnic groups have their languages which depicts as their mark of identity. Nigeria, our country, is faced with the problem of multilingualism and ethnicity. These languages are very significant to their users but three, out of the whole lot namely: Yoruba, Hausa and Igbo are nationally recognized, reason being that they are considered to have the greatest number of speakers and geographical location. The development and growth of these major three Nigerian Languages necessitated the establishment of The National Institute for Nigerian Languages, Aba in Abia State in 1992. This research therefore, examines the significant importance of using these Nigerian Languages with particular references to Yoruba, Hausa and Igbo (WAZOBIA) for effective communication strategies. Descriptive model of approach is adopted while collection of data is through library and oral interaction. Findings include that effective communication with Nigerian Languages has the tendency to ensure our togetherness, peaceful co-existence, unity, love, progress and security of life and property. We recommend that communicating with these Nigerian Languages should serve as a unifying factor and not to disintegrate us. In conclusion, all hands must be on deck to salvage our Nigerian Languages for effective communication like their counterparts globally.
